

EXHIBIT

“K”

PLAINTIFF’S SLAM MAGAZINE
INTERVIEW

(<https://shop.slamonline.com/collections/magazines/products/slam-july-august-2019-222?variant=28188173434985>).

It's the last Sunday of April, and with the 2019 NBA Draft less than eight weeks away, the League has recently announced the 233 early entry candidates who have thrown their names into the hat hoping to hear them called at Barclays Center in June.

With the NBA draft early entry deadline in the rearview mirror, most hopefuls who submitted their paperwork to the League office have by now signed with an agent and have begun their pre-draft training regimen. The process usually involves spending the two months leading up to the draft at expansive training facilities provided by their respective agents, preparing for the looming combine and individual team workouts in the coming weeks.

Yet on this warm spring day, the projected No. 1 pick in this year's draft, the one who many consider the most highly touted prospect in the past decade, is actually still on a college campus preparing for finals week.

(<https://slam.ly/zion-mag>).

<https://www.slamonline.com/mag/zion-williamson-cover/>

Yes, Zion Williamson (<https://www.siamonline.com/tag/zion-williamson/>) is still on campus heading into May, and tomorrow he has a PowerPoint presentation as part of a group project in his "Sexual Pleasures of the Modern World" class. The topic is sex work and Zion and his classmates have spent the past couple of months researching the subject in the lead-up to the class presentation.

"It's only about six groups. PowerPoint, videos, a lot. There is no small part. You're going to have to talk a lot," says the 6-7 forward.

Seeing the undisputed No. 1 pick in the upcoming draft still walking around campus, talking about his upcoming class presentations while everyone on the internet attempts to project just how much the 18-year-old could potentially earn in endorsement deals is not really what you'd expect.

At Duke he has taken his interest in performing arts and creative industries and has pursued classes that further expand on those areas. With his face brimming in excitement, he begins to list off his favorite classes at the Durham institution.

"My favorite class was History of Hip-Hop, taught by [music producer] 9th Wonder and professor Mark Anthony Neal," says the Spartanburg, SC native.

He wastes little time in explaining what he's learned there.

"I love how people from today's generation take samples from classics that people probably don't even know [and] put it in their music and will call it a banger. One example for me would be with Alicia Keys—9th Wonder taught me this one—her song 'You Don't Know My Name,' she got a sample from a song called 'Let Me Prove My Love To You' by The Main Ingredient. Nobody knew who The Main Ingredient was from today's generation. That's what makes me love music."

Then there's the "Copy of Writing 101: The Disney Version" class, which focuses on studying classic Disney films and then conducting semiotic analysis on them. It's a course his mother, Sharonda Sampson, remembers Zion constantly raving about.

(<https://slam.ly/zion-mag>)

<https://www.slamonline.com/nba/zion-williamson-cover/>

~~“You’re not watching it from a kid’s perspective,” says Zion. “You’re watching it [looking for]~~ what signs is Disney giving away, what are they trying to promote here? From a racial standpoint, from a political standpoint—are they trying to prove something to the world? With The Princess and the Frog—a black princess...you don’t see that very often so that was a message.”

Every Tuesday and Thursday morning there was also “The Theater Today” class, where “basically we would watch clips about people performing in theaters and then we would go do it, too. I’m not good, but I had a lot of fun doing it,” he says, trying to contain his laughter.

As he walks you through some of his favorite classes at Duke, the genuine joy he gets from just talking about the courses is obvious. The irony of him still being on campus this late into the spring—as he prepares for finals week while most people in his position would have (and have) left right after the final buzzer, as is usually the case for a prospect of his status—is that just a couple of months earlier, the whole world was telling him that there was no reason for him to even finish off the basketball season with the team.

After the UNC game on February 20, when Zion’s left foot famously blew through his sneaker while spraining his right knee in the process, current and former NBA players encouraged Zion to shut it down for the season.

Denver Nuggets guard Isaiah Thomas (<https://www.slamonline.com/tag/isaiah-thomas/>) tweeted: “Too much on the line to be messing with college if you got a legit chance to turn pro. One injury can change somebody career, Zion sit yo ass down lol and we will be ready for you in the big boy league #LookingOutForThePlayers.”

Isaiah Thomas
@isaiahtomas

Let these kids go straight out of HS!!! Too much on the line to be messing with college if you got a legit chance to turn pro. One injury can change somebody career, Zion sit yo ass down lol and we will be ready for you in the big boy league #LookingOutForThePlayers

33.1K 11:28 PM - Feb 20, 2019

6,164 people are talking about this

Atlanta Hawks guard Trae Young (<https://www.slamonline.com/tag/trae-young/>) tweeted: “Zion Need To Chill Out The Rest Of Season...”
<https://www.slamonline.com/1454/zion-williamson-cover/>

6/24

Trae Young
@TheTraeYoung

10 5

Zion Need To Chill Out The Rest Of Season...

13.1K 11:31 PM - Feb 20, 2019

1,802 people are talking about this

Hall of Famer Scottie Pippen (<https://www.slamonline.com/tag/scottie-pippen/>) said: "I think he's done enough for college basketball that it's more about him personally now, and I think for him as a young player, I would shut it down. I would stop playing because I feel that he could risk a major injury that could really hurt his career."

DeMarcus Cousins (<https://www.slamonline.com/tag/demarcus-cousins/>) added: "My advice to him is do what's best for you and your family. Obviously, college isn't. It does nothing for you at this point. You've proven you're the No. 1 pick coming out and proven your talent."

Forget the typical leaving campus after the season ends move. Just leave the team in the middle of the season, they said. You're too good to even be there in the first place, they said.

(<https://slam.ly/zion-mag>).

Little did they know that not only did Zion have every intention of playing with his team 'til the very last whistle, he also had every bit of intention to remain a regular student on campus 'til the very last final exam/presentation.

"At the end of the day, no matter who the person is, everybody is entitled to their own opinion. I appreciate the input. I really do. It gives me a heads up of where I'm at. But I made a commitment to my brothers. So if I was to sit out, that'd be very selfish on my part," Zion says. "And I couldn't do that. Sitting on the sideline and watching your brothers battle without you, knowing you can be affecting the game, it hurts. I made a commitment so I wasn't going back on my word. So I knew I was coming back the whole time.

I was very surprised cause it turned into something I didn't even think—that's the last thing I thought would happen. It wasn't even a thought. It was probably something we looked at, somebody saying I should sit down—haha, that's funny. I'm coming back."

—

Just 48 hours after seeing his college career end in the Elite 8 of the NCAA Tournament, after a 1-point loss to Michigan State, Zion was not only back on campus being a regular student, he was also running pickup at the school's rec center with regular students.

In a video that went viral, Zion lobs the ball off the backboard to himself for a two-handed dunk in a nondescript gym amidst an otherwise normal-ish pick-up game. (Minus, you know, a future No. 1 pick.) He slammed it so hard that the iron structure that holds the goal up and is attached to the concrete wall completely gave in and began dangling. He had broken the goal. Not the rim, but the entire actual goal that was attached to the wall.

SLAM

@SLAMonline

Zion back at it! 🏀 Please tell me that goal is still attached tho...

pic.twitter.com/veMhSzMZhp

11K 8:53 PM - Apr 2, 2019

3.369 people are talking about this

It's this kind of authentic approach to the game that has made Zion such a likeable and respectable figure. The love for basketball seems genuine. Money doesn't appear to be the driving force. Otherwise, shutting it down midseason would have been a real consideration. It never was. Otherwise, waiting 'til that sneaker deal is signed and sealed before attempting to jump again (as many fans suggested when the rec center video went viral) would have gotten in the way of giving random Duke students at the Brodie Center a story they'll tell their kids about one day.

"You get this college experience once," he says. "If you're in a situation like mine, where you're one and done, I'm just trying to make the most of what I got. I love Duke, and honestly, I don't want to leave. If I didn't have as much at stake, I probably would stay for another year. But I can't.

"Being at Duke was a dream come true for me. Everything about it. Looking to the sidelines, Whoa, that's Coach K I'm playing for! Coach K is looking at me [and] telling me I'm built for this moment. I have a true brotherhood on and off the court. Everything was just a movie," he says. "This was the best year of my life. So if I could come back for a second year I would, but unfortunately that's just not the reality we live in. The reality we live in is [that] my ultimate dream is the NBA. It's what I've been dreaming about as a kid so I have to pursue that. And I have to take care of my family."

(<https://slam.ly/zion-mag>)

<https://www.slamonline.com/roba/zion-williamson-cover/>

Zion announced that he was entering the 2019 NBA Draft on April 15, just six days before the NBA early entry eligibility deadline expired. He was the last member of the team to announce his decision. And according to his stepfather, Lee Anderson, it took some nudging from the family to get him to finally sit in front of the camera and announce his decision.

"He waited until the last minute to do it. He really, really didn't want to say goodbye," says Anderson. "But he knew that the time had come for him to do that. He was a little bit remorseful about doing it. He was just kind of sad. We kept calling him and saying, 'Hey Zion, you have a deadline to meet. You need to make sure you get it done by this time.' He'd say, 'Don't worry. I'll get it. I'll do it.' He wasn't in no hurry to get it done. So I just told my wife to let him be. Give him time."

Adds Zion, "When I was by myself, I was like, You know what? Maybe. What would be the worst if I came back for a second year? And my teammates [would] look at me and go, 'We know you love this place but you gotta do what's best for you and your family. Nobody is going to hate you for this.'

"I remember I was doing my video announcing I was declaring for the draft. And I didn't want to do the video. I don't want to leave. I love everything about Duke. If people think I'm BS-ing or not telling the truth—that's them."

In a historic campaign that will go down as one of the most dominating seasons ever by a college freshman, Zion averaged 22.6 points, 8.9 rebounds, 2.1 steals and 1.8 blocks per game. He shot 68 percent from the floor. That's the highest field goal percentage ever by a freshman. He joined Kevin Durant (<https://www.slamonline.com/tag/kevin-durant/>) and Anthony Davis (<https://www.slamonline.com/tag/anthony-davis/>) as the only freshmen to have ever collected over 500 points, 50 steals and 50 blocks in a season. He was the third freshman to ever win Naismith National Player of the Year. He became the first college player ever to win ACC POY, ACC ROY and ACC Tournament MVP. He became the first player to ever average 22 points per game while having an effective FG% over .700. His 40.8 PER was the best player efficiency rating in 20 years.

(<https://slam.ly/zion-mag>)
enter search term